Directive 93/42/EEC and EN ISO 13485:2016

Certification of the quality management systems of medical device manufacturers

Incentive

The manufacturer must provide evidence of the conformity of the device with the fundamental requirements set out in the directive and in the harmonized standards. The conformity of medical devices must be assessed under Directive 93/42/EEC before they are brought to market. When it comes to the required verification of conformity, the preferred approach is to arrange for a Conformity Assessment Body (CAB) or Notified Body (NB) to certify the QM systems as conforming to EN ISO 13485/assessment of the technical documentation. A positive assessment leads to authorization to use the CE mark and to place medical devices on the market.

Outcome

The general concern is the manufacture of safe and high-quality medical devices. Manufacturers of medical devices are required to set up and maintain a quality control system and, where applicable, to have it certified on the basis of a table of conformity assessment criteria.

Target groups

Industrial undertakings and service organizations working in the field of medical devices.

Validity

Conformity assessment; 5 years – there is an annual audit to ensure that standards are being maintained and a recertification audit after 5 years.

QMS; 3 years – there is an annual audit to ensure that standards are being maintained and a recertification audit after 3 years.
